Preparing for the Future

By Kiara Bush

On November 7, Fairmont State came to South Harrison to speak to high school seniors. Within the following weeks, on November 15, Marshall University also came in to speak to the seniors. They presented the perspective graduates with information about the school, majors offered, and the application process. Not only did they inform the students about applying, for any senior that wanted to, the application fee was waved if they applied after the assembly.

College application fee's might not seem like much, but after applying to several colleges, with varying fee's, it'll start to add up. When asked about what advantages these presentations provide Mr. Belcastro, vice principal, says, "...the biggest advantage is the waved admission, it's free and teaches students about the application process. You can also only find so much information online and in brochures, the face to face interaction provides more accurate and honest information."

Eventually, everyone will have to go through this process. Whether it's later this year or in five years, it will affect everyone. When asked about what advice he has for underclassman, senior Colby Posey says, ".... before you know it, it's time to plan your future and apply for college. These meetings help you understand what's going on and prepares you to be more prepared. I'd tell underclassmen that, no matter how pointless you think the college presentation are, pay attention because they could really help you."

Blood Drive

By Haylee Talkington

The South Harrison High School Student Council hosted its annual Blood Drive sponsored by the American Red Cross. The Blood Drive is a good opportunity to bring together the community and school to help others. Toran Payne, sophomore, stated that it was important to donate blood because it is a way to give back to the community. This was a first-time experience for Payne. He added, "I got to hold my own bag of blood and I thought that was a very unique experience. I feel it's important to do a blood drive because if someone needs blood, we can contribute to that need." Payne concluded by stating "There are a lot of precautions before you can donate blood to keep the people who receive it safe. I learned an important lesson by donating blood and I plan to continue doing this in the future."

Pierpont National Aero Space Education Center

By Toran Payne

The Aero Space Center is a great way for teaching juniors and seniors how to work and fix planes. They have multiple storage facilities and are frequently sponsored. This year alone they've gotten millions of donations just to put in new equipment. The space center is used to help students learn on how they can better their skills in engineering technology and even teach them terminal work. Students can get a few hours into college credit and even get scholarships. The space center is completely free and can even give bus rides during school hours. They need 600 students so go find them now!!!

Math Field Day

By Caelyn Clark

Math Field Day was one of the biggest events that occurred in November for our school. Mrs. Cobb sponsored the event, and four students from our school attended. Clarise LaFavor, Brooke Mitchell, Holly Rogers, and Ethan Talkington were those students. Holly Rogers came in first place throughout the county. The students selected had taken a test to see if they were qualified to partake in Math Field Day. Math Field Day is put on by the Board of Education and is made up of four tests with about 70 questions, which Holly Rogers scored the highest on each one. Holly said the written test was her favorite event at Math Field Day, though she says all of the events are fun. She explained that the written test is worth the most and the other three tests aren't that important. One thing that Holly noted was that the time limits were kind of short, and that they should be longer. Winning Math Field Day is a good way to get our school's name out there, and hopefully more wins come in the future.
