Harrison County Schools Receive $15,000 from Harrison County Commission

CLARKSBURG, West Virginia – Harrison County Schools received $15,000 from the Harrison County Commission this week to help with food distribution in the county.

The Harrison County Board of Education greatly appreciates this donation and what it means for our community during these uncertain times. The Coronavirus may be changing how we socialize in the community with one another but the power of people helping people remains stronger than ever.

“We are very appreciative of the donation from the Harrison County Commission and the ability to work together during these difficult times. The commission and the Harrison County Board of Education are working closely to ensure our families are fed and we will get through this together. Governmental agencies are working together to make sure our families get through this,” said Dr. Mark Manchin, Harrison County Schools Superintendent.

"The money helps but more importantly it shows the overall community commitment to feeding the children of the county. We thank the Harrison County Commission for the support of our students," said Gary Hamrick, Harrison County Board of Education member.
